A Mother Made Happy.

Possible one of the happiest moments of her life was when Mrs. Jule Jackson had all of her children to come in unexpectedly to honor her fifty-fourth birthday anniversary on Thursday Aug. 30.

Each child brought a basket filled with good things for the dinner and Mr. and Mrs. Jackson had the pleasure of sitting at the table with their eight children and twelve grandchildren besides a number of relatives.

The children are: Messrs Ely Jackson, Roy Jackson, Marion Jackson, I. V. Jackson, Benny Jackson, Mrs. Gabe Auesbury and Mrs. Russel Keenan.

DUTY OF MEN IS MADE PLAIN

sued By President. Every Outlined.

Regulations governing the conduct of men who have been accepted into the national army are very plain, although somewhat long, and if studied carefully will enable every drafted man to do all, and only these things which he should do. They were prescribed by the President on August 8, and a digest is here with given:

The local boards, after examining men and certifying those not exempted to the district boards, will receive from the district boards lists of those finally accepted for military service. The local boards will thereupon notify each man accepted to hold himself in readiness to report for military duty at a time and place to be specified later. Each man will be mailed his individual notice, and the whole list for each local district will be posted in a public place and probably printed in the newspapers, but it is the duty of every man involved to make sure that he receives his notice. Failure to receive it will not exempt any man from punishment for failure to report

By the time the roll has been called and a few hurried good-byes have been sold the train will arrive. The selected men will then board the train, after which they will have nothing to do except what the leader tells them to do. The leader will look after their meals and sleeping accommodations, if it is the mobilization camp, and will see that no liquor is furnished them and that they are not left at any way station, The leader will be in charge until the mobilization camp is reached, and even then until he hands them over to the camp commander.

The Lexington Red Cross Convention.

The first State Convention of the Red Cross was held in Lexington, Kentucky August 22nd and 23rd and was attended by more than 500 delegates from various Chapters in the State. Every section was represented. All of the sessions were characterized by great enthusiasm and the deepest interest. At the begining of the war Kentucky did not have a single Red Cross Chapter. The Red Cross has grown from 200,000 members when the United States went into the war to more than 4,000,000. This however is only four members to every hundred of our population. Stress was laid upon the fact that there should be at least twenty-five per cent enrolled as members of the two per cent membership. The major ity of men and women in this country have no other way to express their patriotism and devotion to the men who will fight our battles in France than to become members of the Red Cross, and for every woman who can sew or knit to wear a Red Cross but a duty to belong. PLEASING RESULTS.

With The Aid Of Shippers. 1,989 Cars Used For Carring Freight For Contonment.

Reports from all sources indicate an augmented car supply. The credit for this is, not altogether due the railroads the shippers are doing their part in handling equipment promptly and in loading it to full capacity. With the necessary to sleep during the journey to people behind them the railroads are able to show results never before obtained.

> The railroads must within the next 30 days move 687,000 men of the regular army and 350,000 men of the National Guard to their various training camps. Some idea of this task may be had when it is understood that to move merely one field army of 80,000 men, 6,229 cars made up into 366 trains with 366 locomotives and train crews, are required. While these troops are being moved the transportation of commercial freight, war supplies and passengers must be performed.

> At Louisville cantonment alone the railroads have delivered from June 26th to August 23rd, 1,477 cars lumber and 512 cars miscellaneous freight, a total of 1,989. This 2,475 acres of farm lands have within something over two months been transformed into a city of comfortable buildings, sewerage, electric lights, telephone exchanges and splendid roads that will shortly house 41,500 soldiers.

Every possible effort is being made to increase the movement of coal. In June the railroads were able to handle 26 percent more than in June last year. This was done with an increase of only 3 per cent in cars and less than one-

THE FAMILY LIFE.

Its Normal Restraints Make Man the Master of Himself.

Modern assailants of the family suppose that by destroying it they can ceive that the goal of life is the throwing off of all restraints, says William Roscoe Thayer in Harper's Magazine. Nothing could be more mistaken.

Normal restraints, those which build up a man and make him master of himself, are really the means by which he gets his true freedom. A little water in a boiler will generate enough steam to run a locomotive; the same volume on the ground is a puddle and no more. Discipline is the barrel of the gun, the rudder of the ship. The same law applies to human beings, and such an institution as the family has proved itself indispensable to the highest development of its members.

The man who thinks that by casting off its ties be gets a larger freedom deceives himself. At most he exchanges a higher plane for a lower and secures whatever privileges that descent implies. He retreats toward the plane of the beast, out of which it has been man's mission to rise and climb. He accepts the bondage of a more insistent selfishness.

It is estimated that about 80,000 deer are killed legally in the United States each year. These produce nearly 10,000,000 pounds of venison. The biological survey of the United States department of agriculture says that this number of deer can be very largely increased, since only two or three states produce more than 10,000 deer a year and many less than Fighting Total Second Only to That of 1864-65.

More men are actually in service under the flag either as soldiers or sailors than at any time in the country's history, with the exception of the closing year of the civil war. The government gave out the exact number of men at present under arms as nearly as it can be compiled. It shows that 943,141 men are now in uniform. This does not include any of the 687,000 men of the national army. It is estimated that already 100,000 have been accepted and by reason of that fact are now part of the military forces of the United States.

In the months elapsed since the war began approximately 1,300,000 men have offered themselves for service in the nation's fighting forces, or in other words have volunteered. This includes all rejections for the army, navy and marine corps.

OLD FRIEND OF VICTIM

"I'm Sorry I Must Sink Your Ship," He Said-Personal Belongings Saved.

Because of the high mortality among German submarine commanders the German admiralty has been compelled to impress former captains of German merchantmen into the U boat service. British skippers along the Brooklyn water front who have been "torpedoed out" of vessels within the last few weeks report that they are meeting former acquaintances with increasing frequency in command of submarines.

One such meeting led to the first recorded case during the "ruthless" blockade of genuine solicitude on the part of the U boat commander for the welfare of his victim. For obvious reasons the name of the ship and the British skipper concerned cannot be mentioned, but it can be said that both the ship and its dren visited her sister, Mrs. Everett master were well known in the Atlantic trade and along the Brooklyn water

The U boat had, as usual, signated the British crew to abandon ship and row to the side of the submarine. The captain obeyed instructions under cover of the German gun. When he clambered on the submarine's deck and handed his papers up to the commanding officer their eyes met.

There was a flash of recognition, and both men stood in open mouthed astonishment. They were old acquaintances and had had many a friendly glass together in Brooklyn, Liverpool and Hamburg before the war. The German was the first to recover himself. "Why, hello, -," he said in English and reached out his hand. "I'm sorry to see you here." The British skipper said he was sorry to be there and inquired after the health of the German officer's family. Both for a moment forgot that they were enemies.

--- but I've got to sink your ship," the German said finally. But I'll tell you what I'll do. It's against all regulations, but you go back and get your personal belongings and those of your men and stand by while I sink the ship, and I'll give you a tow part way to shore."

The German was as good as his word. He gave the Britishers time to get back on board their vessel and sling their luggage into the boats. Then they rowed to one side and waited. A few shots from the U boat's deck gun sent the vessel down. The U beat crew paid out a long towline, to which the lifeboats were lash ed one behind the other and towed until within rowing distance of the Irish coast. There the line was cast off, and the submarine submerged.

BURBANK MAKES NEW FIND.

Yield of Wheat Will Be Increased by "Plant Wizard's" Discovery.

The development of a variety of wheat which will yield five times as much to the acre as the average of wheat production throughout the United States is announced by Luther Burbank, the "plant wizard" of Santa Rosa, according to a dispatch to the Sacramento Bee.

Burbank's announcement of the success of his experiment comes ten years after he began work on wheat and at a time when wheat may be the biggest factor in winning or losing the world

According to Burbank, the average yield of wheat will run from fifty to seventy bushels an acre. If it is universally planted, he says, the production of the present acreage of wheat could be doubled many times. Experiments as to the milling nature of this new variety of wheat are yet to

FOOD CAMPAIGN

Good Advice In Humorous Ditties From Washington.

PRODUCTION'S BIG INCREASE

In All Sections of the United States the Response to Appeals For More Food This Year Has Been Gratifying. Verses Issued by National Emergency Food Garden Commission,

Much has been written about gardening, canning and drying of fruits and vegetables in recent weeks. This has had a most beneficial effect, as shown by recent government reports, which indicate a tremendous gain in the production of foodstuffs in every section of the country. The National Emergency Food Garden Commission recently issued the following verses, which, in a lighter vein, urge the planting and canning of vegetables:

There was a great czar in Berlin Whose subjects were all growing thin. In good English he said, "Bally winter I dread Because we have nothing to tin."

The young folks of Lakewood, N. J., Said: "We will make gardening pay. We'll stick to the work, We won't dodge it or shirk, For this isn't work-this is play."

A maiden who lived in St. Joe Wrote east to her Washington beau, "I can't be there in June, It is really too soon, For I'm busy with dad's westward hoe."

A charming young bud named Marie Wrote to Mrs. von Stuyvesant Lee, "I'm begging your pardon, But I'm working my garden And can't get away for your tea."

Said Miss Gladys Clarissa McTanner: "I've abandoned my player planner. Art is all very good, But it won't supply food, So I'm playing my tunes on my canner

Mrs. Sadleigh has given up sighing At the cost of the food she's been buying, For she's got 'em all beat On the good things to eat Since she's taken to canning and drying.

NOW IT IS "LIBERTY BREAD." Loaf of Flour Substitutes to Have New Name Given It.

"Liberty bread" is the term to be ncouraged by the food administration, as applied to loaves made of substitutes for wheat flour, rather than the phrase "war bread," used in other warring countries. "The name 'war bread' gives the impression that there is something inferior about the breads made of substitutes for wheat," says an announce-"The fact is that breads made from wheat substitutes are healthful and just as tasty as those made from wheat." Use of substitutes will be encouraged at the food training camps to be held in connection with the fairs and expositions in the near future.

Warning!

VOU'LL have to be a little more careful these days in buying clothes. Just because the price of wool is steadily advancing. many manufacturers of clothing have begun to adulterate their fabrics with cotton in order to maintain a low price.

That means, when you buy adulterated goods, that you are getting less for your money than before. And the presence of cotton in the wool makes a suit wear out quickly and lose its shape in a short while.

You can't afford to invest in cheap clothes now. It will pay you in terms of wear and satisfaction to buy standard all-wool Clothes.

The only way to be sure of all-wool quality is to buy Hart Schaffner & Marx clothes. They have won the confidence of a nation of men and are guaranteed to be all-wool and to satisly you absolutely.

AUTUMN.

F EVER in autumn a pensiveness falls upon us, as the leaves drift by in their fading, may we not wisely look up in hope to their mighty monuments? Behold how fair! So study! so eternal! The joy of man, the comfort of all living creatures, the glory of the earth, they are but the monuments of these poor leaves that flit faintly past us to die. Let them not so pass without our understanding their last council and example; that we, also, may build in this world monuments by which men may be taught to remember, not where we died, but where we lived.

SHALL WE EDUCATE OUR CHILDREN OR NOT?

At the opening of our public school Monday morning, it was in- and Mrs. H. L. Bruner and the of the school. He emphasized the imdeed gratifying and quite an inspiration to the superintendent and the Misses Bruner. teachers to have a number of the patrons and trustees present, who in this way manifested their interest and co-operation in the school Claud and Fred, and Mrs. J. F. work.

So much depends upon the parents for the amount of school work the children accomplish during the year. When parents are not interested in sending their children to school, and do not make it a business to keep them in after they have started and see that they get there on time, then they cannot blame the teacher or child for the pupil not being on the honor roll. Teachers are responsible for children after they enter school, but it is the duty of parents to send them regularly.

This thing of education is one of the vital questions of life, and we do not realize how serious it is until too late. To keep a child out of school is like banging a mill-stone around its neck or breaking one of its limbs. It simply cripples them for the duties of life, and all they can do is just to hobble along.

We, as parents, teachers and school superintendents, are in a measure responsible for those 235 illiterates from our county. So appaling and disgraceful is this fact that it behooves us to get busy now and see that our school laws are more rigidly enforced so that the coming generation will not have to suffer the humiliation of saying they came from a county where there are so many illiterates.

Mr. Bailes, the manager of the Golden Rule store, says he is doing a splendid business, and why? Because he is advertising. Now is the time to have sales and get rid of your old summer stock in order to make room for your fall goods. A good way to keep your old stock on your shelves is not to advertise it.

Babson's Statistical Organization has gathered sufficient data and is in a position to know that about 150 men out of 1,000 are wounded Breckenridge County Association and about 60 men out of 1,000 are killed. This may help to ease the which convened in Cloverport last minds of the families who some times are unduly alarmed about their sons going to the front and never returning.

How much better it would be if the women who are picketing the White House were at home rearing sons to take the place of these erty recently vacated by Dr. and that are going to war-but maybe we are too old-fashioned for the present generation.

Still some were glad to be back While others not so enthusiased as that, And one small lad could not tell his name, for a fact "

Such were the various types of school boys and girls as observed by the visitors which were present for the opening of the Public school Monday morning.

The two hundred and twenty school children with the Superintendent, teachers, trustees and patrons all came together in the asseembly room and daughter and grandson spent for the chapel exercises which opened last Sunday with Otis Stiff and by singing "America." After which Rev. Couch read from the Scriptures and offered a short prayer. Supt. G. R. McCoy welcomed the new and old and little son, of Lodiburg, spent students also the patrons and trustees. Monday night with her parents, Greetings were extended to the children from members of the board of trustees. One of the trustees requested the children to aid the board in helpdaughter, Miss Myrtle, and son, ing to keep the school yard as clean

Supt. McCoy is anxious to make this on time. The first bell rings at eight o'clock and the second at eight twenty. He also stated that owing to the lack of room, the children under six years of age would not be allowed to enter. The school law requires that children Mrs. Wade Pile and baby, Alice must be six years old on or or before willingness to meet the patrons half way and accept the children as soon as they become six years old.

A Dramatic Scene.

The most dramatic scene ever witnessed in Westminster hall was that trial in Henry VIII.'s reign when 480 men and eleven women appeared before the king and some of his great nobles with ropes around their necks on a charge of being concerned in the rising of the prentices on the previous May day. Fortunately they had good Mary of France and Margaret of Scotland-who begged for their pardon on their knees, and when Henry at last yielded to such supplications the prisoners, it is said, "gave a mighty shout for joy, throwing their halters toward the top of the hall." The stage has never produced anything to rival that framatic moment.-London Graphic.

Give Courteous Attention When Telephoning

Concentration and courteous attention given to a telephone conversation is a mark of respect that will be appreciated.

Frequent interruptions and requests to repeat mar the pleasure of the talk. Concentrate on what is being said and talk with a smile. Courtesy is like oil to machinery the lack of it will cause friction and friction in telephone talking is a thing to be avoided.

No. 3 A Motor Launch Raid on the Belgian Coast

A SEA SLUG, British Service Name For Crews of Submarine Chasers. Copyright, 1917, by the Bell Syndicate, Inc.

PROLOGUE.

The author of this series of four arti important part in helping to organize not go. that branch of the service known as the Sca Slugs.

He has accumulated a remarkable collection of anecdotes incident to this exciting branch of the service, and many of these were personal adven-tures in which he took part and which make one of the stirring narratives to come out of the war. He recently returned to the United States to assist the American navy in organizing the same branch of the service and should be of great value because of his experipatrol prior to the advent of the United States destroyer flotilla in British waters. Of course some of his experiences, of military value to the enemy, cannot be related. At the request of the service publication of his name is withheld.

TT is better that I do not mention the name of the Sea Slug who conceived the idea of a motor launch raid on the coast of Belgium-that part of the coast held by Germany, bordered by a maze of mines, girt by a moving belt of gunboats and patrol craft and freckled with a series of land batteries which make the experts say it would be mathematically impossible to smash into the naval bases from the sea side.

The British government prefers to keep his name secret for the present, so it would not be policy for me to divulge it. When he put the idea up to the commander of the base he said

"I don't want to lose more than six boats. If you can get six crews to volunteer for the service go ahead. I won't order anybody on a raid like

Six times six crews volunteered, but only six were allowed to go. We chug-chugged out of Dover just before sundown, every man with a lifebelt strapped under his shoulders, petrol tanks filled to the last drop, ammunition in every available space and every motor thoroughly inspected down to the last screw.

We were thinking only of what a time we were going to give the Boches. The boys that wigwagged "Goodby" to us believed they had seen us for the last time, but wished they were with us just the same. Straight for a certain selected spot on the Belgian coast we laid our course, and when night fell we couldn't even see our own boats. There wasn't so much as a pin point of light showing on any of the craft. Every one wore dark uniforms, and every once in awhile when we'd crowd on a little more speed there would suddenly loom up right ahead the dark hull of the boat we were following and we'd almost be aboard her. The men at the wheels had to have their nerve with them. Over the Mine Fields.

The chap who had proposed the raid -we might as well call him Jones, which is not his name-had figured out the tide conditions to a nicety, and on this particular night we were having the fullest high water of the autumn. Just before we ran into the mine fields we passed a British monitor, about which I will have more to say later, and then began the real work of the expedition.

As every one knows, some mines are set so that they rise and fall with the tide and remain always a certain distance below the surface of the water. and if we didn't hit one of these it would be merely a matter of luck. There were thousands of mines all around us, and there was no earthly way of telling where any of them

As for the mines which are anchored always the same distance above the bottom of the sea, we were counting on the extra high tide to take us over At least Jones had figured that

The men in each crew have been carefully selected. They are all in the best physical condition, good swimmers, and the Brass Hats (officers) have even made certain that none of them has a cold. A succese or a cough might betray us. Despite this, the damp, chilly night air makes one of the men in our boat sneeze suddenly. It sounds to us like the crash of a mine. I don't see why it didn't take the top of the fellow's head off. Our finely made motors, of course, were muffled until you could not distinguish their purr ten feet away.

There is a lurid stab of red in the darkness ahead-a deafening roar-the smell of battle is in our nostrils. The eader's three incher has barked. Ours barks at almost the same time. Ours the explosion as the shell falls on board the destroyer. That is better luck than we had looked for.

The Searchlights Scour the Sea.

The flashes have shown us other craft-destroyers, patrol boats and gunboats. No hope of concealment now. and double back, waiting until we are out of the zone from which we started to fight.

I do not suppose any of the Huns ever thought of the little motor launches. They seem jumpy in their nerves, judging by the way they handle the searchlights. Probably they think some new engine of warfare is attacking them, like the tanks which so surprised them in the trenches one fine day.

Umph! Suddenly I am blinded. think for a hundredth of a second that I am shot, and my head is splitting. It is a searchlight, the rays full and square in my eyes. The gunner fires into the source of the light. It seems hits her he will be lucky, for it is possible for us to see anything.

We can hear the "woomph-woomph" of shells dropping into the water around us. We have made up our minds that it is all over, but two of the other boats, not being blinded by the searchlights, turn their fire on our tormentor. If the Germans hold on us we are gone, but they seem to be in a frenzy, and while they sweep round, trying to pick up the other craft, we change our course, and they do not seem able to find us again. They fire on every stick of driftage and spar that darkens the surface of the illuminated water.

Out Over the Dangers of the Mines.

When the rising sun began to streak the sky we were safe. Way off to port lay the monitor we had passed the night before, and the Brass Hat, in command of the expedition, signaled us to run over to her and take ac-

The monitor was one of a type much in evidence during the first years of the war, mounting heavy guns forward in an armored turret. The guns were made in America, and most of the monitors were named after American generals.

They were used on work that took them constantly into the mine fields, and for that reason they must have special protection against mines and torpedoes. Just how this is accomplished I do not feel at liberty to tell, but because of it an amusing incident occurred. The first motor launch was running at rather low speed in toward I point out the black patch to the the monitor, so as to come alongside. Brass Hat. They had to use a crane to get her off.

Well, we had roll call and found only one man slightly hurt. A bit of A piece the size of a man's palm was imbedded in the side of one of the M. L.'s. We had got off mighty lucky. I might say here that later six other boats made the experiment again, and only one got back to England, so it isn't such a soft assignment. In that single craft were all the men has bitten, for we can see the flash of from the five launches who had survived the hell they ran into. And there was plenty of room, for those who had been lost were many.

Under orders the survivors of that raid refrained from telling what actually happened, but in general it is true that the Germans must have realized what occurred on the first expedition, and they were ready. The ele-

There was light enough to take a moving picture of the scene.

"Any human being would have run, but that chap's a devil or a god. He shouted orders to his men as though he were at maneuvers and fished us out of the water with a boat hook as coolly as if he were merely picking up a buoy and couldn't understand what all the racket was about.

"After he got me on board I saw him fall with the blood spurting from his leg. He grabbed a bit of rope, made a tourniquet himself, using the barrel of his revolver to twist it tight. and directed the work until he had all of us on board.

"How we ever penetrated that bar rier of fire and lead and steel I don't know, but we came through and limped into port under our own power."

As I say, I was not on this expedition, and what few details other than those I heard I am not at liberty to tell. Well, to go back to the monitor. We all went aboard and were given breakfast. In the ward room one of the officers told us some interesting things about their work. "These tubs," he explained, referring to the monitors, "are not armored. We carry heavy guns forward, and the barbette is the only part of the craft that is protected by armor plate.

"All along the coast we have buoys anchored to mark fire positions. We cruise along, pick up one of the buoys and let go a few shots. Of course we know the range and where the German forts and batteries are, although we can't see them. Semetimes we have hydroplanes observing for us, so that we can tell whether we're on the target, but we have been doing it so long and we have the coast so well plotted and the buoys so carefully planted that it's mostly a matter of mathematics.

"It's all very impersonal. We drop a few shells into a harbor or fort, then move on to a new position and drop a the coast for a little party, when all of a sudden, after our first shot, a shell plumped into the water just beyoud us. We let go another, and the second German shell fell just a little short. Both were in line.

"We thought it was luck, so we moved to a new position. The same thing happened, only this time one shell came on board and did some damage and hurt some of our crew. Of course we thought the Huns must have some planes up giving the batteries our range, but we couldn't spot one anywhere. This sort of thing kept up all morning until it became positively uncanny. The day was heavy with fog, making aerial observation difficult.

How the Germans Got the Range.

"Then an officer who had been an observer in the Russo-Japanese war explained it. The Japanese had used a system at Port Arthur to locate some hidden Russian batteries that this chap said the Germans must be employing, and I guess he was right. In fact, we know now that he was. How we confirmed our original opinion cannot tell.

"Every one familiar with the principles of artillery fire knows that a shell does not travel in a straight line. It travels in a curve called the trajectory. Elevate a gun of a given caliber to a certain angle and fire it and the trajectory will always be practically the

After Our First Shot a Shell Plumpe Into the Water Just Beyond Us.

The curve varies constantly, becoming steeper as the velocity of the shell decreases and it begins to be affected more and more by gravity

The Mathematics of It.

"Now, what the Germans had done was this. They erected a series of gauze screens-at least three-between us and a battery which we were accustomed to shell. To hit the target our shells must pass through these screens. Electrical timing devices indicated the length of time the projectile required to travel between the screens, and of course the distance was already "In fact, they could check themselves on it, because they could plot the whole curve from the section they had with their knowledge of the velocity, and they could figure the straight distance from the velocity of the shell when it reached the screens and the velocity they knew it must have when it left the muzzle of the cannon on board the monitor.

"The best proof that the system worked was the fact that, no matter where we moved to, their shots straddled us, and besides the one which came on board us one of our other ships got a shell in the boiler room."

Well, somebody's always taking the joy out of life, as we say in America. After mess we left the monitor, the

He didn't mean that there was anything particularly reprehensible in being neutral, but if there were no neutrals we'd always know who to fire on and who not to. The trouble is that a lot of ships are cruising around under neutral flags and reattering mines in their wake.

"We're always nervous when we're in waters a neutral has just traversed. Down at Dover- But I'm getting ahead of myself. I will tell about what happened at Dover in my next article. The fourth and concluding article of

PRIZE LIST OF $1,000 FOR STATE FAIR COUNTY EXHIBITS

Through the efforts of Commissioner of Agriculture Mat S. Cohen the agricultural products of Kentucky will occupy a very conspicuous and distinctive position at the fifteenth annual Kentucky State Fair, to be held in Louisville the week of Sept. 10. This year the prize list for county exhibits has been placed at the remarkable figure of $1,000, and in consequence the attention of the entire agricultural interests of the state will be centered on this particular feature of the big annual celebration. The prize list was announced the first part of the year as reaching the sum of $700. This sum was increased recently through the efforts of Mr. Wood Crady of the Louisville Chemical works and of the agricultural committee of the board of trade. He induced the board of trade members to vote an additional sum of $200 and his firm to add another $100 to this amount, thus securing for the county exhibitors of the state the unprecedented sum total of $1,000. As the list now stands the county winning first prize will receive $400 in cash, the county winning second prize will receive $250, and the winner of third prize will receive $150. This lifts the three prizes from $250, $150 and $100 to the above figures and gives to the Kentucky State Fair the largest prize list for county exhibits ever offered by any state fair in the United States with the exception of Dallas. Tex., which is the largest and richest tair in the country and has been in existence twice as long as the Kentacky State Fair. In addition to the cash awards for the best county exhibits, Colonel E. H. Taylor, Jr., of Frankfort, Ky., will give to the county winning first prize a handsome sterling silver cup, which will be known as the "Old Taylor cup" and which will be worth $100.

To the man or woman working up interest in the county exhibit winning a prize will be given a "booster's award" of $60 for the representative of the county winning first prize, $25 for the representative of the county winning second prize and $15 to the representative of the third prize winner.

Make your plans to visit the fifteenth annual Kentucky State Fair, to be held in Louisville the week of Sept. 10. This is "doing your bit" toward stimulating and encouraging agriculture and stock raising in accordance with the government's call.

ENGLAND GRIM, DETERMINED TUMULTY GIVES GOOD ADVICE

Twice Each Day In the Bright Sunlight and In the Gloom of Night, When Millions Flit Through Darkened London, Comes a Picture More Tragic Than Any Dramatist Can Write.

Tears for the living, tears for the dead, show the aching hearts today in the Merrie England of former yearstears for those who are leaving, tears and maimed by the fires of death. England weeps unashamed as she fights unafraid. Tenderness for the manhood she is sacrificing brings bitleave a void filled by the iron of hate. grim visaged war. A nation once laughing and care free now is tearful and determined, says young Mr. X., who took his troubles to Junius B. Wood, writing in the Chicago Daily News.

All London Now Changed.

"I wonder whether London will ever be the same happy, thoughtless city it was in the old days," said a British ed through the parklike country with the tiny green fields, winding lanes and thatched stone houses.

His name was famous wherever the union jack waves, just as are those of Mathewson, Wagner and Cobb under the Stars and Stripes, for he was one of England's famous cricketers and had played in every part of the globe where the British game has followers. Just as he had played for the national honor on the field of sport, he was fighting for it on the field of battle.

"It's the same 'buckle up and face the ball,' for British spirit never dies, but the smiles, the laughter and the music are gone," was the way he phrased it.

Tears well from the eyes of gray haired mothers in black, from the stern faced soldiers back for a breath of home after the months of fighting. from pale young eyes of British blue. Along the Strand, favorite of topical song, the stream of humanity never ceases. Twice each day, afternoon and evenlag, it halts as the ambulances slowly make their way to historic Charing Cross station, just off Trafalgar square. One ambulance at the station draws the curious. This is not one, but a hundred or more, somber gray vans marked with red Maltese crosses, filling the long, hilly roadway at the station side.

A train is coming from the coast bringing the woanded, and only a few, from the fields of France. On a train shed platform, side by side and end to end, the stretchers are spread, covering it with a mantle of tan canvas The hurrying station crowd stops. Some were elbowing to gates for countryside homes, some arriving from lands beyond the seas, others bidding tearful farewell to loved ones, healthy and strong, leaving for the front of long trains from opposite platforms to the grim symbols of the future homecoming, if there be a homecoming. The train glides silently to a stop, a white clad nurse in each door along its side, the ambulance orderlies pick up their stretchers. Wrecked humanity is to be carried away. It is part of every day's routine in London. as regular as the twice daily mail in any of the 10,000 small towns in our home country. The first ambulance is loaded and rolls out of the station.

When the Vans Arrive.

It was only a narrow lane through the crowded station courtyard and down the bustling Strand, hushed for the time save for the stifled sobs for those who will not return, those who have gone or others who in their young manhood are to go. Another follows. then another, each one brings a thousand heartaches.

Under the first archway stood a chit of a girl. A cheap ribbon was the only ornament on her little hat, the lace on her waist of frayed lavender siik was soiled white boots with heels of ludicrous height. The little purse she opened held a big English penny and only one. "A rose for a penny," said the flower woman, and the last penny went for a red rose. Some had bought dozens, others had armfuls.

She ran behind one of the gray ambulances slowly picking its through the human lane. A skinny arm flashed in lace and lavender and the rose fell inside. Tears streaked the little rouged cheeks as she faded into the crowd. Others threw their armfuls. For every ambulance there were roses. Sometimes in the shadowy interior a hand would wave. Occasionally one would feebly try to rise. It was home again in England after the hell of war. Usually only a nurse would gratefully nod in appreciation for those too weak to answer. Twice each day, in the bright sunlight of afternoon and in the gloom of night, when millions flit like shadows through darkened London, comes the same human reel, a picture more tragic than any dramatist can write. For every 'ear, a memory'; for every rose, a

How about running errands for the president or doing something like that, where I'd be in Evansville.

The case of young Mr. F. of an Ohio town furnishes a study in military psychology. He applied for admission to the training camp for reserve officers "because he looked well in uniform" and some of his girl friends "dared him to get into the army." He friends and relatives. got in and is in a fair way of being promoted to the grade of first lieuten-

Less than a month's discipline, nowever, has taken all the martial spirit out of him, and for three weeks he has been pleading to officials of the government by telegraph and letter for pertorn, her spindly shanks were set in mission to quit The report of his superior declares that he is fitted in every way to be a suitable officer, and the indications are that he will continue to "look well in a uniform."

The case of Mr. K., who comes from a "family of fighting Irish," shows that he has inherited the spirit of his tribe. Starting nearly four months ago, young Mr. K., whose home is in Massachusetts, has been turned down by the marine corps, the army officers' reserve corps, the aviation sections of both the army and navy, the signal corps, the quartermaster's division, the Red Cross and a college hospital unit.

The chief objections to the fighting Irishman are that one of his lungs is bad, his sight is not good, he has varicose veins and has hardening of the arteries. All this has been made quite clear to young Mr. K. by impartial medical examiners. But, bless your heart, it hasn't discouraged him the least bit, and he has been the soul of optimism, determined to "beat my way into the game some way." He is willing to go anywhere, fight anybody, so long as he is not compelled to serve in a British regiment, so strong is the antient prejudice of his clan.

AUSTRALIAN STORE TALK.

Their Term "Soft Goods" Means What We Call Dry Goods.

The United States is not the only country that takes liberties with the mother tongue. Australia speaks a language of trade that would not be understood elsewhere. For instance, "dry goods" is seldom heard, the Australian term being "soft goods." This generally applies only to piece goods, with some inclusion of ready to wear articles. The house or shop that carries articles for men's wear is known as a "mercery" and never as a haberdasher's. "Haberdashery" means what in America is covered by "notions." The shop that handles women's wear is known as a "draper's," and the organization composed of members of the trade is called the Master Drapers' association. 'The "mantle" department is the one that handles women's coats and suits. The manager of the store or shop is known as director, and an "assistant" is a salesman. "Warehouseman does not mean a man who stores goods for others, but a wholesale dealer in "soft goods" and the like. The business of what is known in America as that of warehousemen is conducted in Australia by "bulk stores." -- New York World,

His Spate.

"And do you mean to say you and your husband never had any spats?" "My husband had a pair once, sir, but he gave 'em to the boy who sprinkled our grass." - Cleveland Plain
